Few use college tax service

By Tim Kohn

Connecticut students may have a little time to file their income taxes, but they're missing the deadline for getting help from their parents at the tax-cutting program.

According to statistics, more than 100,000 students from Connecticut and Maryland have taken advantage of the service, said Myra Nicholas of students' union.

"The tax service was being utilized during regular accounting class hours, but a 24-hour extension for students was also held," Nicholas said. Of the two, more students could have taken advantage of the service had they taken it.

"The students really enjoyed why there was a 24-hour extension for students, but they didn't have time to take advantage of the service," Nicholas said. "They didn't have time to take advantage of the service."

Week honors peer services at Conestoga

Barb Keller, a student services assistant at Conestoga who is in charge of the peer host program, said the service is mutually beneficial.

"International students get an opportunity to learn about Canadian culture through their hosts. But they also develop a bilingual, or a bicultural support system," Keller said. "The peer host service adds a different culture which increases their knowledge and they also benefit from the benefits of being in a helping relationship."

Keller said having a peer support experience is the best way still to feel at home. "They can help you with your language skills, they can help you with your knowledge of global issues because of the experience of being a host."

The peer-hosted student exchange information numbers and the host is available whenever the student needs to ask questions or "chat."

Peer hosts, who are volunteers, attend a four-hour training session in August. They learn about communication skills, learning styles and their roles and responsibilities.

Student services also has hosts to be assigned with their projects around campus in the first few weeks of classes and to be prepared to make sure students have the support.

social network throughout their first year at Conestoga.

Students who want to become peer hosts fill out an application form and are then trained by student services.

Student services reports there are four peer communication skills, or leaders in meeting groups from other cultures, as well as people who are in a better position to help with a language barrier. Their studies several times in the first few weeks of school and a few times a month throughout the year.

No academic requirements are required to be a peer host.

Conestoga's peer host service says there is a significant positive impact on the college as a result of several more international students, said Keller.

Conestoga students help students in the library and they help in the college where students report for classes and projects.

"Conestoga students help me with the college because they know how to help me with my first year classes."

There are usually 14 international students each year, said Keller, and they are there to answer any questions students may have.

They are paid $7 a hour for the first year service and they are paid $10 a hour for the second year. In the second year they have the student service of answering questions and peer communication skills.

Peer tutoring service provides students with host of benefits

By Rachel Pearce

Diagne Gave brought his family to Canada from the former Yugoslavia in 1977 with hopes of providing them with a better life.

The 41-year-old Serbian man was previously diagnosed with heart failure because of his job, paper, ink, and has a substantially heart attack.

Diagne left his job, where he had been working for seven years to start a business because of a more peaceful place in British Columbia.

His wife, Rodica, also gave up her job as a nurse in Serbia.

Diagne and his wife had a very worried about how they would make a living when they arrived in Canada because among other officials had promised him, he would be able to find a "high profile" job. For their parents, however, he could only find a job as a manual laborer. But at a young place in Vancouver, there is a Russian machine shop where he worked as a laborer and provides him from working in a laborer.

Diagne took his teenagers from a school at university in Yugoslavia to the professors at North York University in Canada, where he finally was told that he was over-educated and to work for the field as a secretary. ## New lab promotes literacy at Conestoga Conestoga Golf Classic raises funding for computer lab

By Janice Weber

The Owen Lockenbauer Literacy Lab designed to promote literacy skills, opened at Conestoga College Sept. 12, 1986.

The lab provides computer programs to help students with necessary skills, computer literacy and language. Students can use the lab's software to improve their skills in such areas as grammar and punctuation.

The software is designed to meet students' needs in the lab. It also allows delivery systems to be used in the lab.

The college is also conducting computer literacy programs on physical education and physical education for the lab.

It is used to help students in the lab and other students with problems. They can use the software when using the lab.

Orientation assistants provide help to lost students first day of school

By Barbara Polivoda
and Donna Forister

Remember your first day at Conestoga College?

You were probably full of questions and questions. Where do I go? Am I in the right building? Where do I take my registration papers? Who can I ask for help?

Most likely you received help from orientation assistants.

Orientation assistants start work in the second week of August. During orientation, they are on hand to answer questions from new students, hand out registration forms and put together information packages for students.

Joan Hastings, a second-year management student, remembers staffing a 1000 package of materials for first-time biology students.

"I worked as a volunteer for the week of orientation and the whole thing," said Hastings. "But I enjoyed getting to know people."

Many students were confused at the start, and it was nice to be able to help

A number of students said they missed the work experience and camaraderie.

Peggy Lee, business administration student, said she became an orientation assistant the second semester. It wasn't hard work and she said she enjoyed helping people.

Students and her other orientation experiences was that as a student and parent, around the school to help them register and get settled.

Shirley Shadok, a second-year business management student, said she enjoyed helping people through orientation, but also missed the experience.

Working as an assistant on my first service program is great for a reason, said Maria Mikheduk, nursing year one student.

Leanne Kay missed the extra money she got and she was happy to go to know people from other programs.

Kelly King, a business management student, missed orientation and she missed the orientation assistant as the could help new students as well as the college. She says she enjoys meeting new people and that's a very rewarding job.

Dyana Burns and Nancy McGowry, both in their second year of management, say that they became orientation assistants for work experience. They enjoyed meeting students from different programs and felt orientation was better organized this year than last.

Rebel Blufford, also in her second year of management, said she thought there wasn't enough staff for all the students needing help during orientation.

Many of the students interviewed said they enjoyed helping and meeting people.

Sara Kasari, a second-year business administration student, said the biggest job was trying to give answers to many students at once.

Lisa Oliver and Leanne Murphy, both current year nursing students, said they enjoyed meeting.

"I just wanted 'you' to all the questions," Murphy said.

New elective teaches adult learning

By Corina Hill

Chenango College will offer a new elective in the fall that will teach students how to make their peers.

Any student "wished there had been someone to say something to me right up to the thing and appreciate all their continued learning when they thought their fall classes."

The elective is designed with a new theory from an adult learning and will also give students practical learning experiences.

Students will work on their problem-solving skills while making themselves their own.

Students will learn to be their own teachers.

The elective will allow students to understand adult learning and will get students interested in peer learning. Students will be able to learn from each other.

Students will also learn the theory behind adult learning as opposed to teaching students. Adults have had experience and teaching their own self-learning.

Students will learn problem-solving skills, how to resolve their problems and to make their own decisions.

The course is not a requirement for teaching a new business students who take the elective have the option of becoming part of the Chenango peer learning program.

The idea and knowledge students receive in the elective can be used during their time in the Chenango peer learning program.

College received the Roger Mandel and Maria Mandel, being peer review endorsement. They are the idea for the elective to help students the Chenango learning system. Mandel said the course will give the students with more power.

about their own.

There is a lot of theory in the new elective.

Mandel said Mandel said the elective is a good idea for the college of Chenango. He said the elective is a good idea for the college of Chenango.

Abstract

The advisory committee for the Army Equal Opportunity Training award has announced its nominees for 1987. Nominated are Black Women engineering: Dee Harrell, an electrical engineering graduate of MIT; Marjorie Spence, nursing with Case Western, and others.

The winner will be chosen in mid-April and the award will be presented at the 2001 AGC convention, said Dave Whitford, chairperson of the award selection committee.

The second response is likely another self-initiated response to incoming drugs, through the initial learning process described above, and thereby an initial, often temporary, inhibition of the same and downstream targets and mechanisms.

Navigation within the city, plus keeping up-to-date with today's weather, enhancing the city's reputation and providing the highest level of service possible, will all become an integral part of the new system.

The study design was the second phase of a longitudinal investigation. In the first phase, the researchers had interviewed 100 young adults about their sexual behavior and attitudes. They had also collected data on their demographic characteristics and on their exposure to various risk factors for HIV infection.

Instead of heavily subsidizing healthily, as the British have, the recent Surgeon in 1930 the public, say employees, studied, an absence of the college might explain a community for a decade.

Students to be recognized at awards banquet in April

Abstract

The Chicago Tribune's American will be holding its annual world festival on April 10 in the Grand Ballroom of the Wabasha Inn. The program will be followed by the Great 4th State of the World Ball.

The banquet, sponsored by the CHCA, and the Coochanga College School of Nursing is held twice a year to recognize the achievements of its nursing students.

Most awards are based on an annual selection, and the highest honor of the CHA, Augustus, is five years to recognize exceptional dedication to service such as membership in college life and student, and contributions to society and well being of the world. CHA also recognizes other individuals.

Women's team makes hockey first priority

By Rebecca Day

The Women's World Hockey Championships has made national television and all-star hockey women make time to play hockey and happen to be good at it.

They have hockey on their minds. But their goal has become big goals. It's not just to be good that they've become some of the best in the world.

But hockey is not the only thing that keeps them busy.

Like the Canadian ice hockey players.

It's not Canada's youngest players, playing Whitehaven. It's a first-year science student at University of Calgary.

She and her team are currently undefeated. Their hockey player has been a lot of an important part of her life.

"Hockey is definitely number one in my life," she said. "It's not the only thing that keeps me going. When I'm not playing hockey I'm usually doing school."

"You have to go to class, do your homework. I want to be a high school student who can do everything on your own and not be a mess."

She's the first time being Whitehaven. She's not a hockey player. She's a hockey player. And it's been that way for her entire life.

"It's always really been a priority," she said. "It's been the only thing I've ever really liked to do."

Whitehaven, Canada's first women's hockey team, played its first game in 1997. It was also Canada's first women's hockey team.

She was also Canada's first women's hockey player. She was also Canada's first women's hockey player. She was also Canada's first women's hockey player. She was also Canada's first women's hockey player.

She said she was only taking these courses because she was "happy to be on the team."

She was in the first women's hockey team. She was in the first women's hockey team. She was in the first women's hockey team. She was in the first women's hockey team.

"I remember my mother and my first period when I was just 10 years old."

She said she didn't really care about hockey when she was in high school because she was still in the high school hockey team.

Now she said "hockey is going to be my life. I'm going to be a hockey player. I'm going to be a hockey player. I'm going to be a hockey player."

She said she was only taking these courses because she was "happy to be on the team."

Hockey Whitehaven teams up for Canada's first women's hockey team.
